The Contemporary Pacific is published twice a year, in Spring and Fall. Articles and reviews on current issues and concerns from a wide range of disciplines in the social sciences and humanities are published with the aim of providing comprehensive coverage of contemporary developments in the entire Pacific Islands region, including Melanesia, Micronesia, and Polynesia. Opinions expressed in these pages are the responsibility of the authors. Information for contributors and subscribers appears on the inside back cover.
Information for Contributors

The Contemporary Pacific welcomes scholarly articles on contemporary issues of concern in the Pacific Islands, with particular reference to the latter half of the twentieth century. Articles on such issues as urbanization, culture change, decolonization, dependency, and social and health problems are sought, along with articles addressing such topics as cultural movements, ethnic relations, contemporary history, regional cooperation, population pressure, protection of the environment, and strategic and security concerns. Articles relating to earlier periods in Pacific Islands history, on other regions, or of a more theoretical nature, will be considered if they help to illuminate contemporary issues and concerns within the region. All articles published in the journal are refereed. The Editorial Board encourages articles that draw on the literature of more than one discipline.

Submissions must be original works not previously published and not under consideration or scheduled for publication by another publisher. Manuscripts should be 8000 to 10,000 words, or no more than 40 double-spaced pages, including references. Submit two copies, typewritten or produced on letter-quality printers, on one side only of 8½-by-11-inch or A4 nonerasable paper, with generous margins (3 cm) on all sides. Do not justify margins. Everything must be double-spaced, including each line of references and notes (if any). Editorial style follows the fourteenth edition of The Chicago Manual of Style (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1993), as implemented in current issues of The Contemporary Pacific. A detailed Style Guide is available from the Editor on request. Spelling follows Merriam Webster’s Collegiate Dictionary (10th ed., 1993).

Hard copies must be submitted for review. Guidelines for preparing manuscripts on disk are available from the Editor.
