

EDITORS' NOTE

The current issue of Asian Perspectives (Volume 55, issue 2) maintains the tradition of keeping readers in touch with new archaeological research findings, approaches, and ideas across the Asia-Pacific region. As always, each work has a geographic focus that refers to substantive datasets from particular places as concrete examples, yet is broadly relevant to research in other regions. Looking into the journal's future volumes and issues, we invite new manuscripts that emphasize the larger implications of Asian and Pacific archaeological studies beyond geographic boundaries.

Over the past year, the journal has moved to online electronic management of all new manuscripts and reviews, at <http://asianperspectives.msubmit.net/cgi-bin/main.plex>. We expect to continue receiving high-quality work from all authors and peer reviewers, but the electronic management system will facilitate standardizing file formats, tracking manuscript status, and other technical issues. While transitioning to the new system over the next months, we encourage you to check the journal's official website for the latest updates: <http://www.uhpress.hawaii.edu/t-asian-perspectives.aspx>.

—Mike T. Carson and Rowan K. Flad